SAN MATEO COUNTY ELECTION RETURNS

San Mateo county went Democratic last Tuesday, semi-offical returns showing that Roosevelt received 13,220 votes, Hoover, 18,800, and Thomas 976.

For United States Senator, McAdoo received 10,262 votes, Tubbs, 18,713, and Shuler, 3,549.

In the race for Superior Court Judge, Maxwell McNutt defeated Superior Judge George H. Buck by a majority of nearly four to one, Judge Buck receiving 7,320 votes, while McNutt polled 25,306.

Judge John J. McGrath carried San Mateo county almost two to one over Congressman Arthur Free, who was seeking re-election. McGrath had a majority in all five counties. The result in San Mateo county was: McGrath, 19,464; Free, 11,029.

The $350,000 relief bond issue was approved by the voters of San Mateo county by more than three to one, the result being: Yes, 21,237; No, 7,124.

The county charter was adopted by a two to one vote, 16,552 to 8,693, and the alternative proposition, providing for election at large of five supervisors, one from each of the five districts carried by a vote of 16,531 to 8,693.

The county voted overwhelmingly against Proposition No. 3, against which a determined fight had been made by local contractors, real estate men and a score of other professions. The initiative would have abolished the trust deed. The county also recorded itself as opposed to the initiative measure which would have legalized horse racing while placing a ban on dog racing.

Harry Parkman was elected State Senator, having his place on the ballot unopposed by virtue of gaining a clear majority at the primary election over all other candidates.

Col. Fred Peterson, of Burlingame, was elected Assemblyman, also without opposition.

C. D. OF A. AND K. OF C. ALL SET FOR COMEDY AND DANCE

Vincent P. Lafferty, of the dramatic section of the University of San Francisco, is very well pleased with the remarkable progress made by the cast for the two act comedy that will be held jointly by the Catholic Daughters, Court St. Mary No. 1155, and the Daly City Council K. of C. No. 2712, on Saturday evening, November 12, at the Jefferson Union high school auditorium.

The committee assures everyone that attends this affair a wonderful time, and do not doubt that before the evening is over all will have forgotten there was ever such a thing as depression. For laughter pure and unadulterated will fill the auditorium from the rise of the curtain at 8 P. M. until the fall at 9:20. The remaining two and a half hours will be well spent in dancing to the tunes of the poplar Johnnie Dell's band, and Johnnie promises all will be kept jolly and jovial until midnight.

GIRLS PLAY SOCCER AT JEFFERSON HI

(By the Journalism Class.)

The girls at Jefferson completed the last of their inter-class games last Friday afternoon. Soccer has always been the favorite sport of the girls, so there was much inter-class competition and a greater interest in girls' sports than has been present during the current semester.

The Junior team was favored to win from the first and lived up to all expectations by running away with the championship—an undefeated team at that, too. All the games were played after school under the guidance of Miss Holtz, the girls' Physical Education director.

Now that the soccer schedule is finished, the girls are turning their attention to speed ball, which is a comparatively new sport at Jefferson, having been played only last year. Interclass games in the sport will take place in about one month. The game is a combination of rules for soccer, basketball and football. The girls are all looking forward to the time when they can make their first touchdown.

Several surprises have taken place during last week's play of the handball tournament. Roland Petrocchi, who was expected to rate high, has forfeited his match. Petrocchi was expected to defend the honor of the Senior class against the rest of the school. Elwin Smith played well enough to annex the championship of the high and mighties.

Norbet Pfeifer, hard-hitting Freshman, will play George Barberian, the little curly-headed Freshman. The winner of this match will play little Louie Schenone for the Freshman title.

Frances Franzen, Cornelia Howe, Gladys Oakley, and advisor, Miss Staib, were the delegates from Jefferson who attended the district convention of the California Scholarship Federation, held at Girls' High School in San Francisco, Saturday, November 5.

The day was started by a short business meeting which was followed by many other interesting discussions. At the meeting, it was decided that the next convention would be held at Palo Alto next April.

The round table discussion for the day was on the topic "Scholarship and Leadership." Many interesting ideas were expressed in the talks given by the delegates from the different schools.

Following the luncheon, Dr. Alexander Roberts, president of the San Francisco State Teachers' College, gave a lecture on "The Compensations of Scholarship."

An invitation was extended to all delegates to visit the War Memorial Opera House in San Francisco.

Following the example set by the class of '31, Jefferson Union high school Seniors have again chosen sweaters as their class emblem. This decision was made at a meeting held last Thursday. The sweaters will be blue with gold emblems on the deep pockets. They will be made along the same line as suede jackets with V or round necks and small buckles on the sides. They will probably be completed within the next two weeks, in time for the Senior dance, which is to be held in the Jefferson auditorium Friday evening, November 18.

Two girls, Dorothy Green and Mary Bertocchi, recently received awards for selling the most tickets for the Jefferson theatre party at the Daly City Theatre. Mary proved herself to be quite a saleswoman by breaking all the school records of ticket selling by turning in money for seventy-three tickets by 3:15 Thursday afternoon. Consequently she received first prize.

Dorothy managed to come in for second honors by selling thirty-seven tickets. Both girls deserve a great deal of credit for their hard work to help make the theatre party a success, and they certainly displayed a great deal of school spirit.

Shot through the chest in a hold-up, Guy F. Pease, of Burlingame, is fighting for his life in a Seattle hospital, according to an International News Service dispatch.

ROOSEVELT CHOSEN PRESIDENT BY VOTERS OF UNITED STATES

Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt of New York was the choice of the voters of the United States for the presidency, as voiced at the ballot box last Tuesday.

President Hoover carried but six states, with a total of 59 electoral votes, while Governor Roosevelt will have 472 to his credit.

Connecticut, Delaware, Maine, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania and Vermont declared for the Republican standard bearers, all of the other states being in the Roosevelt and Garner column. The plurality of the successful candidate is estimated at about 4,500,000 votes.

In addition to the smashing landslide for the Democratic presidential candidate, both the Senate and the House of Representatives will be Democratic, assuring President-elect Roosevelt of support in his policies and program. The Democrats will have a majority of approximately 130 in the House. The new Senate will have 59 Democrats, 36 Republicans and one Farmer-Laborite.

Democratic governors will sit in more state houses than American political history has yet recorded.

In California, latest figures show that Roosevelt had passed the 400,000 mark over President Hoover, and McAdoo wos more than 200,000 over Tubbs, with Schuler lagging 125,000 behind Tubbs. The voters of the state selected eleven Democratic Congressmen in the new allotment of twenty in the House of Representatives.

From his home in Palo Alto last Wednesday, President Hoover sent a message to President-elect Roosevelt in which he said: "I congratulate you on the opportunity that has come to you to be of service to the country, and I wish for you a most successful administration. In the common purpose of all of us I shall dedicate myself to every helpful effort."

In a statement issued on Wednesday, President-elect Roosevelt said the presidential election was a national expression of liberal thought and a desire for a new deal.

News comes from Palo Alto that in carrying out his pledge to Governor Rosevelt to be of every possible helpful service, President Hoover plans to invite the man who will succeed him to a White House conference to discuss policies and programs affecting the nation's welfare. President Hoover, it was said, stands ready to co-operate with the president-elect in putting into effect any policies that will lead the nation out of the economic slump. When the invitation to Governor Roosevelt will be extended has not been determined, but it may be issued shortly after President Hoover returns to Washington next week.

Vice-President Curtis, declared in Chicago last Wednesday, as he passed through that city on his way to Washington: "I cheerfully accept the verdict, and eagerly, if not confidently, await the return of abundant prosperity that the Democrats have assured the American people they will bring about promptly and certainly when they take over the nation government on March 4."

President Hoover announced Wednesday that he intends to return after March 4 to live in Palo Alto and to resume private life to recoup his personal fortune.

HOOVER RETURNS TO HOME TO VOTE

The presidential party, after being escorted from the Ferry building and being met at the Civic Center in San Francisco by Mayor Rossi and other officials, proceeded south on the highway down the peninsula, arriving in Daly City about 1:45 P. M., where the president was given a cordial welcome.

The sidewalks were crowded with residents desirous of securing a glimpse of the president. The school children had been granted permission to join in the greeting to the president, and kept up incessant cheering and bantering during the time they were awaiting the arrival of the presidential party. The occupants of many a passing automobile probably wondered what it was all about when greeted by cheers, or the "raspberry" by hundreds of youthful enthusiasts lining the sidewalks during their wait for the arrival of the president.

When the presidential party finally arrived the cheers of the youthful spectators, as well as the older ones, were acknowledged by President Hoover in a manner which indicated that he appreciated the welcome accorded him upon his return to his home state.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH HAS UNIQUE FEATURE

Last Sunday evening the Presbyterian church was surprised by a visit from Marvello Trowbridge Berryhill, a radio artist who sings the old ballads with the aid of a guitar and haromnica. He presented an interesting program of sacred and folk song music. This coming Sunday morning at the 11 o'clock hour the pastor will speak on "One Thing Well Done." In the evening a service of the old time gospel hymns will be enjoyed, commencing at 7:45 P. M. The young people's meeting will commence at 7.

GIRL MEETS DEATH IN AUTO ACCIDENT

Miss Edna Wight, 18-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jason Wight, of South San Francisco, was fatally injured last Sunday as the result of an automobile accident in Burlingame.

Willard Hoffschildt, 23, has been charged with manslaughter as a result of the accident and his bail fixed at $500. Hoffschildt and three other occupants of the car, all residents of South San Francisco, escaped with cuts and bruises. They are: Bernice Hoffschildt, 17, sister of the driver, and Amelia Forneasi, 19, both of 340 Baden avenue, and Lawrence Garnsey, of Baden avenue.

The accident occurred early Sunday morning when Hoffschildt, said to have been traveling at a high rate of speed, attempted to turn from El Camino Real into Peninsula avenue. The car skidded to the curb, struck a traffic signal and crashed into a telephone pole. Miss Wight and Garnsey were in the rumble seat and were thrown from the machine when it hit the curb. The girl struck on her head on the pavement and her neck was broken. She died shortly after arriving at Mills Memorial hospital.

The young people admitted they had been to a party south of Burlingame, but blamed the accident on the heavy fog. At Mills Memorial hospital, Hoffschildt was pronounced intoxicated by physicians, according to police.

TANFORAN SUNDAY CHARITY PROGRAM

Two important days are coming in the final period of the racing at the Tanforan course. The fall meet of the Pacific Coast Breeders Association winds up Saturday, and on Sunday will be held the one day session of the Welfare Jockey Club. Indications are nearly all of the best thoroughbreds at the track will take part in the sport on the concluding day.

The Aloha Handicap, head liner on Saturday, promises to attract fleet ones of the class of Polydorus, Trombone, Calome, Lemon Hills, Board Walker, and other winners of features of the meet now approaching its getaway. The public has been furnished with a series of "close fits" throughout the autumn period in the handicaps and on all sides commendation has been made of the cleverness of Racing Secretary J. S. Rothert in assigning the burdens.

There have been notable one day sessions in various sections of the country in the past, but the afternoon of sport to be given on Sunday is confidently predicted to outshine them all. Funds to be raised at the gate—every one is going to pay Sunday—will be expended judiciously to people who have not been doing so well in a material way in these upside-down times. It seems probable a record will be established in the amount of money to be taken in at the turnstiles and from other sources of revenue at a race track.

It is a difficult task to instill interest in the horses themselves in a recreation in which there is such an intense desire to be on a winner. At the end of the sixth meeting at Tanforan, however, there is manifest a steady growth in such matters as engross the true fan—weights, track condition, improvement, training off, skill of the jockey, and so on. "Hunches" and so-called inside information are losing their potency.

Bahamas, champion of the session, was called upon, properly enough, to tote 120 pounds in one of the last handicaps of the meet and put up a game struggle under the skillful handling of John Maiben to finish third to Lemon Hills and Wirt G. Bowman, to both of which he was conceding eighteen pounds.

The distance of the feature was one mile and a quarter and that was a factor the close student of form took into consideration as to the possible winner of the contest. It is a question as to the liking of Bahamas for any route beyond one mile and an eighth.

The keenest observers had noted that trainer William Hartman had adopted the dubious expedient of sending his good colt out at various and sundry times when the races were on, apparently with some idea of "showing off". It was learned quite awhile ago, especially in the case of Morvich, Kentucky Derby winner, that exhibition gallops for race track crowds and friends seldom do a hores any good; they appear to disturb the orderly preparation of the willing animal.

Changes that come with slow going were demonstrated in the sport last week end. Runners that garnered little in the way of purse money found their racing legs following slight rain falls.

Bon Homme, brown son of the American Sweep and Sue Smith, by the English Masetto, must be accorded the honor of leading the sires of worth while horses at the meeting. The stallion with the Gallic moniker is the "daddy" of Bahamas and other fleet performers. The "Good Fellow" was over at Pleasanton for a while and lately has been standing at a nursery in Southern California.

John Maiben earns the laurel crown by a wide margin in the jockey brigade. The vetrean pilot has retained his ability to time his run with a horse to a nicety and that knack wins stakes and overnight events pretty often. The one drawback of the Alameda county farmer is his tendency to stop riding in the last hundred yards when he realized his mount cannot be first to the imaginary wire.

Apprentice Lee Humphries has the "pep" that is essential in race riding and promises to develop into another Maiben. The boy is not discouraged in the least by written condemnation along the line he has been "lucky" and possesses no ability, as his record is a complete refutation of that uncalled for "knocking."

LONGFELLOW P. T. A. MEMBERS PRESENT RADIO TO SCHOOL

The Singing Mothers of this unit donated seven yards of material, and the Sewing Mothers made five boys' shorts and one pair of girls' shorts.

The Girl Scout Troop, No. 35, with the assistance of Mrs. Charles Verbrugge, made a layette, which was on display at the William Taylor Hotel.

The Longfellow P. T. A. is sponsoring a whist party to be held on Saturday, November 19, at 8:15, at McNamara Hall, Twenty-fourth and Mission streets.

The National Red Cross organization reports having expended $355,526 in assisting its chapters to carry on their relief activities when local funds were exhausted. It invites you to join, November 11-24.

LEGION CHANGES MEETING NIGHT

An interesting meeting of Daly City Post No. 410, American Legion, was held on Friday evening, November 4.

Comrade Prizborowski has his plans well under way on the 1933 membership campaign. Every member is working hard to get our quota for the Aerial Pickup, November 13.

Plans were made for a dance, the place and date to be announced later. Also a whist to be held in the near future.

The regular meting nights of the American Legion have been changed to the second and fourth Wednesday, through a poll of the entire membership. Don't forget the next regular meeting, November 23.

Comrades Crane and Chapman attended the County Council meeting held at San Mateo.

Welcome home, Comrade Vance. It is good to see you with us again.

ARMISTICE DAY—ITS MEANING

November the eleventh of each year always brings back to the American people memories of the happiest and most glorious days our nation has ever experienced. It was a great moment of victory. Our people clasped to their bosoms all the emotions of unrestrained joy and gladness. Armistice Day symbolized then, even as it does now, unbounded gratitude and thankfulness that armed hostilities were over, that the anxiety, the worry and the anguish which had torn human hearts through many terrible months was at last ended. We of the present generation may give little thought as to the time other wars of American were concluded, yet the month, the day and the very hour the armistice was signed is fixed indelibly upon the memory of every American who was old enough to remember that event. At one stroke, at one given moment, the black clouds of war were lifted and the dove of peace released to a battle-weary world.

Along the Western front, where the famed Hindenburg line stretched for miles, grimy doughboys scraped mud from their feet and peered cautiously over the top of their trenches. The echo of the last shot lingered in their ears. Only a short time before shells had burst around them with a deafening roar; machine gun bullets whined overhead; the death-dealing missiles of modern warfare screeched their way to missions of destruction. Then came the transition. A sudden silence engulfed the battlefields, a silence that was almost oppressive. American fighting men breathed easier and relaxed nerves drawn taunt from constant vigilance. Slowly it dawned upon them that the war was at an end, that they had won a great military victory, and that now they night look forward to going home and rejoining their loved ones. Wartime service was at an end and these men were dimly conscious that they were now standing upon the threshold of an era of peace-time service to the nation for which they had fought.

Armistice Day commemorates an event of great significance in our American history, and with its more general observance in recent years, it is gradually becoming one of the nation's outstanding patriotic occasions. It revives memories of the great courage and unselfish devotion exemplified both by our soldiers and those who carried the burden of war at home. It affords to the American people an ideal opportunity to reflect on their duties as individual citizens, to rechristen their faith to the ideals and principles of American citizenship which inspired the victory just fourteen years ago. To the men of the American Legion, the observance of Armistice day is especially dear, and as long as the Legion exists Legionnaires will endeavor to see that it is properly observed to the end that future generations may be impressed with the spirit of service so essential to the continued life of the nation and the happiness of its people. With patriotic-minded men and women who always stand ready to exert their best efforts for the advancement of the nation, America will march forward and there need be no misgivings as to what the future may hold in store.

Black Bass to be Tagged In Study by Commission

In an effort to compile a comprehensive history of the striped bass, the State Fish and Game Commission has started a program of tagging that is designed to furnish full information as to the migratory range of these fish, how fast they grow, where they may be found at various seasons, and how they thrive in salt, fresh and brackish waters.

Enlisting the support of several anglers associations, who gladly offer their services, work was started last week putting tags on the first 250 of 10,000 that will be marked before the experimental work is completed.

White and red celluloid discs, one-half inch in diameter, have been provided those who will carry on the work under the supervision of the Division of Fish and Game. The white tag contains a serial number, with the department's initials. The red tag contains information as to what the fisherman, catching a fish so tagged, should do about forwarding the tags to the San Francisco office of the Division of Fish and Game. A record is established of each fish tagged, where, the date, length, and the name of the person catching and tagging the bass.

The tags are affixed to the back of the striper, between the first and second dorsal fins. Those being tagged now run from 9 to 22 inches in length. Returns have been received from a number of the first released after being marked.

The experiment will be carried on in all waters where striped bass are known to exist, and a complete record kept of all fish tagged as well as caught.

Even if our clouds were lined with silver they wouldn't be worth much at the present price.

TANFORAN MEET IN HOME STRETCH

Sunday the Pacific Coast Breeders Association will hold a special day of racing and give all the proceeds to various charitable agencies in the county for the benefit of unemployment relief. The Association agreed to extend its meeting one day for this cause at the urgent request of social welfare organizations in the county.

An elaborate program of racing, featuring the finest horses now at the track, has been arranged for the thousands of fans expected to attend and aid in this worthy enterprise. Every employee at the track will work without pay, so as to enhance the proceeds to be given over to help those people in the county who have, through no fault of their own, found themselves the victims of economic conditions.

The track will be managed Sunday by a voluntary organization known as the Welfare Jockey Club, composed of prominent members of charity organizations on the Peninsula. Admission prices to the grandstand, the clubhouse and boxes have been reduced and there will be no Federal tax. The free list has been suspended for this day.

Management of the track said today that nothing would be left undone to make Sunday one of the greatest days in the history of California racing, so that a fine sum may be raised for relief purposes.

Every facility for the handling of a record throng has been provided at the track.

Saturday will mark the close of the scheduled meeting and as the feature event the Aloha Handicap will be offered. The course will be a mile and a sixteenth, and the purse not less than $1,000. The fastest horses at Tanforan are scheduled to compete in this farewell of the present meeting.

With the close of the Fall meeting at Tanforan, officials and directors of the great plant have received high praise for the calibre of racing offered. Judge Joseph Murphy has been in charge and J. S. Rothert has been racing secretary. Ralph C. MacArthur is resident manager of the track, and Jack Dennis track superintendent. All are widely known in turfdom and have been complimented on their program and operation of the plant.

The Pacific Coast Breeders Association has a state-wide membership, containing the names of persons who are among California's leading citizens. The Association is purely a California organization, formed to foster and promote the breeding and development of California thoroughbreds.

VETERAN FIREMEN HOLD AN INTERESTING MEETING

The members of the Veteran Firemen's Association of Daly City held their regular monthly meeting at the Veteran Firemen's hall on November 4, with a large attendance. Comrade President Andy Chesney presided.

The committee in charge of the big annual turkey whist, which will be held on Friday evening, November 18, at the Daly City auditorium, reported everything in readiness.

Two new members, Firemen Gillett of Campany No 2, and Branfield of Company No. 1, were initiated.

Under the head of new business the nomination of officers for the ensuing year took place. Comrade Jim Callan was nominated for President; Comrade A. Rickmann, First Vice-president; Comrade Gus Schenk, Second Vice-president; Comrade Ed. J. Ford, Secretary; Comrade H. H. Smith, Chaplain. Comrade Arthur Hilton was nominated for Marshal.

Under the good of the order the County Propositions Nos. 21, 22 and 23 were discussed and the members were urged to give this most careful consideration. After the meeting the usual refreshments were served.

Salada Beach P. T. A. Entertains the Children

The Parent-Teachers' Association of Salada Beach entertained all the children in the community at a Hallowe'en party. The children presented a play, "The Promised Land," which was greatly enjoyed by everyone. Following the play, games were played, with all the children joining in the fun, and then the kiddies went upstairs to enjoy ice cream and cake served by the P. T. A. members.

The following evening the Parent-Teachers' Association sposored a Hallowe'en masquerade dance, which proved to be the most successful one of the year. Everyone came in costume, and all enjoyed the music and dancing. At 11 o'clock the floor was crowded with dancers. Then came the judging and awarding of prizes for the best costumes. Mr. and Mrs. Peterson, of San Francisco, won first prize, Mr. McCullen, second prize, and Mr. Vonada, of Salada Beach, was awarded third prize. The children were also awarded prizes, Marian Van Hook and Lorraine Anderson first, and Karin Anderson and Leona Moore, second.

CAVALIERS BATTLE TO SCORELESS TIE

Playing on a wet, slippery Balboa high school gridiron, the football team of the Cavalier Club battled to a scoreless tie with the strong San Francisco Boys' Club team last Sunday. The result leaves the Boys' Club in possession of the championship in the B division of the Stroud-Seabrook football league.

The local organization threatened to socre several times, but was unable to produce a score. The San Francisco eleven threatened only once, losing the ball on an attempted field goal which fell short.

In the last quarter Charlie McKee, Cavalier guard, smashed through the opponents' line to block a punt which rolled to the Boy's Club 26 yard line. Hard off-tackle slices by Jim Smith and Herman Kalinen carried the ball to the three yard line, where the Daly City team was held for downs on the slimy turf.

The Cavalier offense was considerably weakened when Hughie Smith, star halfback, plunger, punter, passer and all-around handy man, was carried from the field unconscious. Smith, while attempting to intercept a forward pass which went out of bounds, crashed head on into an iron fence. He was taken to the Central Emergency Hospital for examination, but was found to have no serious injuries.

Kalinen, Jim Smith, and Hugh Smith stood out in the backfield, while the work of Guerrero, McKee, and Flanagan was outstanding in the forward wall. Blum played sixty minutes of bangup football at center.

Cavaliers Defeat Two Teams in One Night

The basketball team of the Cavalier Club won two basketball games last Tuesday at the Horace Mann Junior high school gymnasium.

In the first contest the locals beat the Phi Ami five by a score of 18-14, in a fast game.

The Mission M's were the victims in the second encounter, being on the short end of an 11 to 8 score. The game was marred by many fouls on both teams..

The line-up of Kennedy at center, Green and Capps as forwards, and Tocolino and Scalia, guards, started both games, with Shaw, Diehl, Baird, Grantham and Gerstenberg doing good substitution work.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK?

By Edson R. Waite, Shawnee, Okla.

J. C. Howerton, editor of the Cuero, Texas, Record, says:

That newspaper advertising will ever play an important part in the business world. It's a business getter when times are good. It's a "life-saver" when business is slow.

One doesn't start coasting when he approaches the hill. And the wise man will take the same attitude in regard to newspaper advertising when business conditions are not at their best. To cut down newspaper advertising when customers are passing you up could never be listed under the head of "economy." It's nothing less than plain business suicide.

In fact, newspaper advertising is the one cure for sick stock which has been "laid up" for some time. In the small town it is perhaps more valuable than in the city, for each and every ad in the small town paper is a personal message to the housewife, to the wage earner who is ever on the alert for values. It's "a record in black and white." It's a necessity.

Among the 369 students to pass the state bar tests were four from San Mateo county, according to the results announced by the Bar Association. They are: George H. Johnston and Robert L. Miller, San Mateo, and Louis Demeatteis and Vroman J. Dorman, Redwood City.

Remarkable records were made by two American jockies this year. Hank Mills, 17, rode in 779 races, winning 169 and placing second in 141. Sylvio Coucci, 16, with 835 mounts, came in first 161 times, and second 143 times. Both records exceeded that of famed Earle Sande in his best year, 1923, when he had 430 mounts, 122 winners and 89 seconds.

For years Elbridge R. Herron, of New York. engaged in his hazardous hobby of mountain climbing, without serious mishap, and at 33 had scaled more peaks than any other American. A couple of weeks ago he decided to try some man-made mountains, the Pyramids of Egypt, the largest two of which he climbed with little difficulty. Standing on the apex of the second, 422 feet high, he waved to friends below, then slipped and fell to the ground dead.

With its one hundred or more members meeting once each month the Hermosa Fishermen's and Liers' Club is believed to be the only one in existence which openly admits both qualifications among its membership. The club recently reorganized for the winter's fishing and allied sports.

Walnut Trees Crowded

According to the Los Angeles County Farm Adviser's office the loss in both production and quality has resulted in many walnut groves because of the crowding of trees. The detrimental effect appears to be caused by lack of sunlight. The shading of the ground also interferes with the drying of nuts after they fall.

Egg Label Law Upheld

The State Supreme Court has upheld the constitutionality of the California "Egg Labelling Law", passed by the 1931 State Legislature. The law provides that manufacturers of pastry, confectionery and other foods using imported frozen or dried eggs must specify on their labels that the eggs used in their products are imported.

Expenses Under Budget

According to figures compiled by City Clerk Ruth E. Meilandt of Ventura, the city spent but one-fifth of the amount budgeted in its general fund during the first quarter of the 1932-33 fiscal year. Of the $102,577.90 budgeted for the year in the general funds, only $21,715.82 was spent from July 1 to October 1. The amount allotted for that period was $25,644.48.

Cato Warns Autoists

In warning drivers who try to beat the traffic signal light E. Raymond Cato, chief of the California highway patrol, stated that the motorist who "speeds up when he sees a favorable traffic light ahead is a dangerous driver—for if the light changes before he gets to the crossing he frequently is unable to stop in time to prevent an accident."

Fee Denied For Work

The university professor who drafted a new county charter to be submitted to the voters of Mendocino county by a board of freeholders cannot collect a $500 fee, Attorney General Webb held in an opinion given District Attorney Lilburn Gibson of Ukiah. It also was held that preliminary expenses incurred by the freeholders are not a legal charge against the county.

Blind Persons Swim

Swimming is becoming a popular sport among the blind of San Francisco, and many of them display prowess in the water, a class of Blindcraft employes revealed in a demonstration at a local both house recently. When the class was started eight months ago few of the blind would venture out of shallow water. However, the sightless men and women are learning to swim and dive.

Station Closing Ordered

The State Railroad Commission has authorized the closing of the following stations: Stirling City, Butte county; West Anaheim, Orange county; Huron, Fresno county; Newberry and Del Rosa, San Bernardino county; Youngstown in San Joaquin county, from November 1 of each year to July 1. Applications have been filed by railroads for the closing of the following: Metz, Monterey county, and Five Corners, San Joaquin county.

Diversion Wall Work

Under the direction of the Cucamonga Basin Protective Association, with the association and the State division of water rights sharing the expense the fourth diversion wall across Cucamonga Canyon is being built. This and the previous walls will serve to divert the flood water from winter rains over spreading grounds. A gate is being completed in the main diversion wall, so that the flow may be regulated.

State Institutions Grow

The quarterly report of the State Director of Institutions shows California has 29,039 dependents in State prisons, reformatories and institutions for the insane, feeble-minded, blind and narcotic addicts. The total represents an increase of 477 in three months. Of the dependent group 19,593 are males and 9446 females. In San Quentin prison there are 4940 convicts, including 130 women, and at Folsom 2734 prisoners, all recidivists.

To Rule on Oil Wells

The oil drilling question, which aroused heated controversies last year, when a portion of the Santa Monica residential and industrial areas was opened to "liquid-gold" seekers, will come up again in December, according to a recent Santa Monica Planning Commission bulletin. Property owners in the oil-zoned district, where no oil has been struck by the only well actually drilled, will be given an opportunity to express their views regarding the continuance of the wildcatting experiment or again closing the area by restoring the ban.

Highway Contracts Started

The State Department of Public Works announced recently the starting of more than a million dollars of work on State highway and bridge contracts in three northern California counties. $523,638 will be expended in widening the Yolo causeway, on the Oakland-Sacramento highway; $328,956 for paving and grading 4.7 miles of the Bayshore highway between Oregon Ave. and Whisman Road in Santa Clara county, and $229,960 for a bridge across Tuolumne river, near Modesto, on the Golden State Highway.

Livestock Tests Slated

In the interest of the livestock industry of the State thirty-one definite tests, to be conducted on typical ranches in key positions in California, are on the 1933 program of the agricultural extension service of the University of California. The district tests will include testing the economy and practicability of improved methods, of supplemental feeding of range cattle, control breeding, finishing cattle, creep feeding calves, range ewe culling, supplemental feeding of range ewes, finishing lambs, grading cattle and lambs for market, range improvement, meadow and pasture improvement.

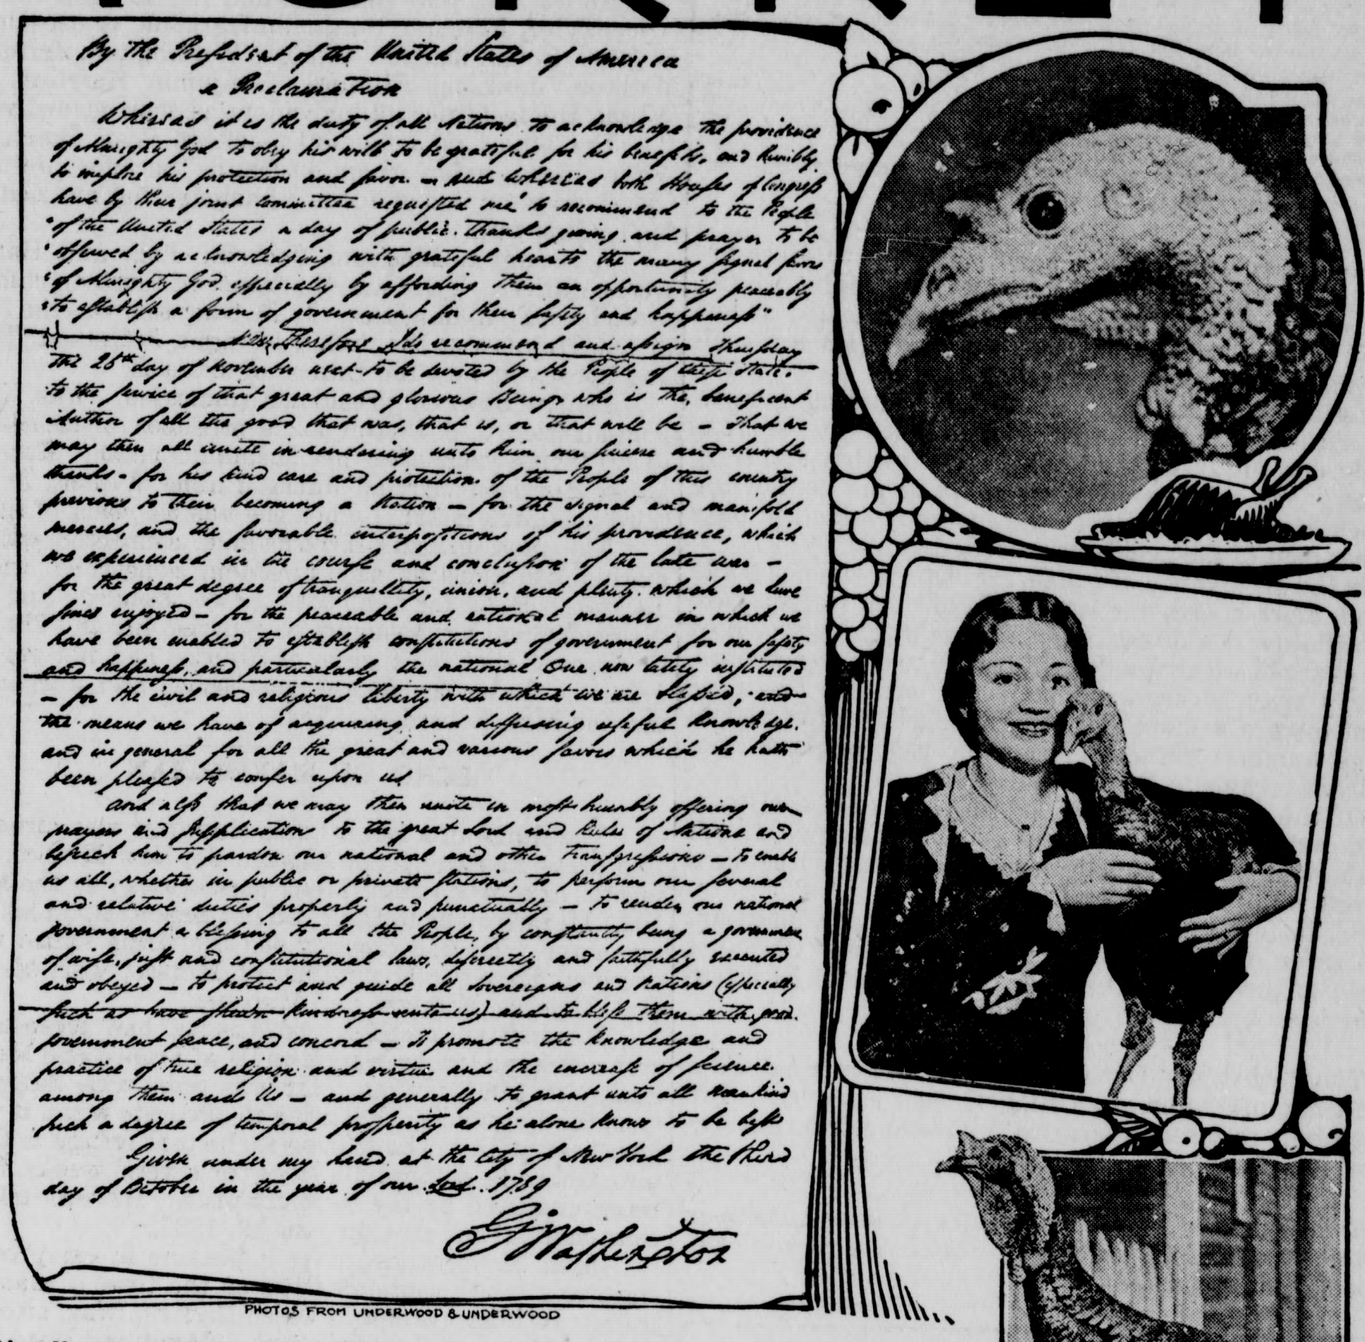
Almond Crop Sold

Most of the better grades of the 1932 crop of almonds have been sold, according to the California Almond Growers' Exchange. Returns will be made as soon as payments are received on delivery of the nuts to the trade.

Bridge Work Started

The State Department of Public Works has awarded a $46,269 contract for construction of the bridge across Topanga Creek, on the Coast Highway about five miles north of Santa Monica.

It's Time to Talk TURKEY



By the President of the United States of America
a Proclamation
Whereas it is the duty of all Nations to acknowledge the providence of Almighty God to obey his will to be grateful for his benefits, and humbly to implore his protection and favor — and whereas both Houses of Congress have by their joint committee requested me "to recommend to the People of the United States a day of public thanks giving and prayer to be observed by acknowledging with grateful hearts the many signal favors of Almighty God, especially by affording them an opportunity peaceably to establish a form of government for their safety and happiness"
Now therefore I do recommend and assign Thursday the 26th day of November next — to be devoted by the People of these States to the service of that great and glorious Being who is the beneficent author of all the good that was, that is, or that will be — That we may then all unite in rendering unto Him our sincere and humble thanks — for his kind care and protection of the People of this country previous to their becoming a Nation — for the signal and manifold mercies, and the favorable interpositions of his providence, which we experienced in the course and conclusion of the late war — for the great degree of tranquility, union, and plenty, which we have since enjoyed — for the peaceable and rational manner in which we have been enabled to establish constitutions of government for our safety and happiness, and particularly the national one now lately instituted — for the civil and religious liberty with which we are blessed, and the means we have of acquiring and diffusing useful knowledge, and in general for all the great and various favors which he hath been pleased to confer upon us
And also that we may then unite in most humbly offering our prayers and supplications to the great Lord and Ruler of Nations and beseech him to pardon our national and other transgressions — to enable us all, whether in public or private stations, to perform our several and relative duties properly and punctually — to render our national government a blessing to all the People, by constantly being a government of wise, just and constitutional laws, discreetly and faithfully executed and obeyed — to protect and guide all Sovereigns and Nations (especially such as have shown kindness unto us) and to bless them with good government, peace, and concord — to promote the knowledge and practice of true religion and virtue and the increase of science among them and us — and generally to grant unto all mankind such a degree of temporal prosperity as he alone knows to be best
Given under my hand at the City of New York the third day of October in the year of our Lord 1789
G. Washington

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

AS NOVEMBER 24 approaches, Americans realize that it's about "time to talk turkey." For November 24 is Thanksgiving day and what would the American Thanksgiving day dinner table be without the presence of a roasted turkey?

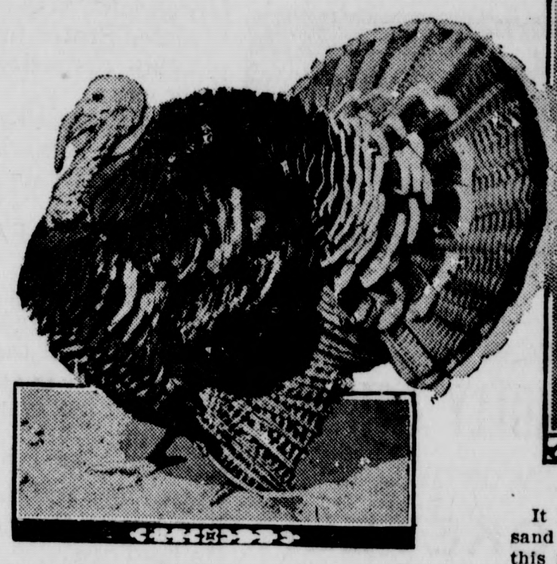
But before proceeding with a discussion of the species of fowl who, once a year, is our national bird, it might not be amiss to consider the origin of that typically American expression "to talk turkey." If a certain tradition is to be believed, it had its origin in an incident which is as typically American as is the custom of observing a Thanksgiving day on the last Thursday in November and making it a feast day of typically-American edibles, chief of which is the native American turkey.

Away back in the early days (just when no one seems to know) in one of the thirteen colonies (it cannot be stated positirely which one, although from certain aspects of the incident the suspicion arises that a Yankee was one of the actors,) an Indian and a white man agreed to hunt together for a day and then to divide the spoils. This they did and the division proceeded agreeably enough until only a crow and a turkey remained.

Thereupon the white man, volubly frank and seemingly generous in manner, said "Now you may have the crow and I'll take the turkey; or I'll take the turkey and you may have the crow." But the red man was not so easily taken in by this glib proposal and replied indignantly "Huh! Why you no talk turkey to me?" And ever since that time, so says the legend, when a person began to dissemble, to conceal his real meaning in a superfluity of words, to attempt to "put over" something on another, it became time for the other to advise him to "talk turkey," i. e. to be straightforward and get down to business.

Reference was made above to the fact that once a year the turkey is our national bird. It is just possible that he might have been our national bird the other 364 days—that is, if a suggestion made by jolly old Ben Franklin had been followed. And thereby hangs the tale of the first coins and seals that came from the mint when the new republic of the United States of America was established. These were rather crude affairs and the eagle on them looked very much like a turkey—and a slightly tipsy turkey at that! Whereupon Franklin wrote this comment: "I am not displeased that the figure is not known as a bald eagle, but looks more like a turkey. For in truth, the turkey is in comparison a much more respectable bird, and withal a true native of America. He is besides (though a little vain and silly, it is true, but not the worse emblem for that) a bird of courage, and would not hesitate to attack a grenadier of the British guards, who should presume to enter his farmyard with a red coat on."

Franklin was quite right in calling the turkey a "true native of America." That he was one of the authentic "first Americans" is proved by the fact that his bones in fossil deposits show that he is of prehistoric origin, and what appears to have been roosting places for domestic turkeys have been found attached to pueblos and cliff dwellings in excavated ruins of untold centuries ago.



The Spaniards who conquered Mexico found turkeys, both wild and domesticated, in that country as early as 1519 and it was no less a person than Cortez's own confessor, Fra Agapida, who wrote back to Spain from Mexico the following "There is a bird, much greater in bigness than a peacock, that is found within the forests and vegas all over this country. It surpasses as food any wild bird we have found up to this time. The natives do shoot these birds with arrows and catch them in various kinds of springes and snares.

Specimens of this splendid fowl were almost immediately sent back to Spain and the Jewish merchants, who were the leading dealers in such commodities at the time, thought they looked more like peacocks than anything else. The Hebrew word for peacock was "tukki," from a Hindu word "toka," meaning "trailing skirt," and these merchants began calling them "tukkis" or "American tukkis." Soon the word "tukki" became corrupted to "turkey" and led to a confusion as to their origin, even though they were of American rather than Turkish nativity.

From Spain the new delicacy from the New world spread to other parts of Europe and won instant favor. Turkeys were taken to Persia by Armenians, and to Batavia by the Dutch. In France—where the turkey was, and is, called "dinde" because they believed it hailed from India—the bird was first served for the wedding feast of the lively young Charles IX and Elizabeth of Austria. Twelve turkeys were considered fine enough for a royal gift from the merchants of Amiens to Charles. By the middle of the century, England met the bird, and in another 20 years it was being plentifully raised in various sections of Great Britain.

And now comes one of the curious paradoxes of history, in that this "native American" became an immigrant to the shores of his own land. In 1629 a letter written to Governor Endicott in Salem, Mass., by his agents in London assured him that "tame turkies shall be sent you by the nexte shippe." So in a short time the New England variety of the North American wild turkey was being mixed with his partly domesticated descendant from Mexico via England—thus completing a curious 100-year, round-the-world trip.

It is probable that not one turkey in a thousand which will grace the Thanksgiving table this year will be a native wild turkey. For the original New England wild turkey (Meleagres Americana) is all but extinct in the part of the country where he first made his appearance on that festal board. The wild turkey of today (Meleagres gallapavo silvestris,) according to ornithologists, is found in greatly reduced numbers only from Pennsylvania and Ohio south to the gulf states and west to Arkansas. There is a smaller variety, the Florida wild turkey, in that state; in southern Texas is another, the Rio Grande turkey and in the Rocky mountain region, another, Merriam's turkey. All modern domesticated turkeys are derived from the Mexican wild turkey (Meleagres Mexicana) of the earliest days. From him comes the exquisite penciling of modern domesticated turkeys.

But to get back to why the turkey occupies such a prominent place on our Thanksgiving day dinner table—of that first celebration, held in Plymouth in 1621, Edward Winslow wrote back to England as follows:

"Our harvest being gotten in, our Governor sent foure men on fowling, that so we might after a more speciall manner rejoyce together, after we had gathered in the fruit of our labours; they foure in one day killed as much fowle, as with a little help beside, served the company almost a week, at which time amongst other recreations, we exercised our Armes, many of the Indians coming amongst us, and amongst the rest their greatest King Massasoyt, with some ninety men, whom for three days we entertained and feasted, and they went out and killed five Deere, which they brought to the Plantation and bestowed on our Governor, and upon the Captaine (Standish) and others."

There is no doubt that chief among the "fowle" at this feast was the native wild turkey. However, according to Mary Austin, "Our elevation of the turkey to the place of honor on the Thanksgiving dinner table is not entirely owing to its traditional importance to the first American Thanksgiving day; it is a tribute to the homemaking instinct of the Puritan women who made the turkey brood a part of that association of men and their wild brethren which is inseparable from the human idea of home. The Indians domesticated the turkey chiefly for his feathers, which they prized. But I have no doubt that the English housewife, arriving chickenless, got her first feeling of being at home from the brooding cluck of the turkey hen about her door."

WOMEN DRIVERS SAFER

For years women have been subjected to gibes because of their supposed inferiority as automobile drivers. But a recent survey by a national board of casualty underwriters reveals that women drivers figure in far less accidents than men, numbers considered.

Estimates from various sources, including government statistics, indicate that women constitute approximately one-fourth of the total number of drivers in the country. Yet, while women represent 25 per cent of the number of drivers, last year they were involved in only 7.63 per cent of the accidents recorded.

In the observance of traffic regulations, women made an even more impressive record. While full statistics are not available, in a dozen large cities only 2.53 per cent of those charged with violations of traffic rules were women. While it may be argued that traffic officers are more lenient toward women violators, an inquiry addressed to a large number of these officers brought responses decidedly favorable to the ladies.

Of the replies received, 78 per cent of the officers considered women more careful drivers than men; 11 per cent thought women equally careful, and only 11 per cent believed women less careful.

So, in face of the record, it appears that women are much safer drivers than men, after all, when they are actually at the wheel. How safe they may be as back seat drivers is an entirely different matter.

The Post Office Department his issued a fraud order against manufacturer of an alleged "hair remover." But alleged hair restorers appear to be immune from governmental interference.

Twelve names for certain species of fishes have been adopted by scientists, probably to designate recently developed kinds of suckers.

PRESIDENTS' FAMILIES

Some facts regarding the family relations of our presidents may be of interest, as they are probably little known to the average reader. How many, for example, could tell offhand how many presidents never married? The answer is, only one, Buchanan.

All the rest were married, and five of them married twice, Tyler, Fillmore, Benjamin Harrison, Roosevelt and Wilson. Seven married widows, Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Jackson, Fillmore, Benjamin Harrison, and Wilson, the last three taking widows as their second wives.

The wives of Jefferson, Jackson, Van Buren and Arthur died before their husbands became president. Cleveland went into office as a bachelor, but married during his first term.

Washington, Madison, Jackson, Polk and Harding were childless. Tyler was the father of fourteen children, seven by each of his wives. W. H. Harrison was the father of ten, Hayes was the father of eight, Jefferson, Taylor and Roosevelt were the fathers of six each.

Two widows of presidents remarried. Mrs. Cleveland married T. J. Prston, Jr., a professor of archeology, in 1913, five years after her husband's death. Mrs. Benjamin Harrison married James Blaine Walker, Jr., her third husband, in 1921, when she was 64 years of age.

The most unusual circumstance connected with the maritial relations of any president concerned Andrew Jackson. Believing that Mrs. Lewis Robards had been divorced from her husband, he married her in 1791, only to discover that the decree of divorce had not yet been granted. Later the decree was issued and Jackson remarried Mrs. Robards in 1794.

ECHO OF MAXIMILIAN

The death of a remarkable character was chronicled in a press dispatch from Almagerdo, New Mexico, some months ago, when Juan Mena passed away at the age of 101. Mena's claim to fame did not depend upon his great age alone. He had commanded the firing squad which executed Emperor Miximilian of Mexico, with his Generals Mijelas, Mirabon and Marquez.

Maximilian, archduke of Austria, had accepted the crown offered him by Napoleon III of France and Mexican leaders in 1864, but his reign was beset with difficulties from the begininng. Refusing to abdicate when it would have been policy to have done so, he took refuge in Queretaro, where he sustained a siege for several weeks, finally being captured by the revolutionists. He was tried by court-martial and shot on June 19, 1867.

Juan Mena, whose duty it became to carry out the emperor's death sentence, was at the time a captain in the revolutionary army, in which Porfirio Diaz, afterward president, was of the same rank. Mena had lived in the Uinted States for many years prior to his death, and was a highly respected citizen, though he could neither read nor write.

FARMERS AND BUSINESS

Regardless of what may be done in the future with respect to legislation intended to aid the farmer, it must be conceded that agriculture will never attain the place to which it is entitled until farmers make up their minds to organize effectively for mutual protection and co-operation.

Because of the scattering of farmers over such a wide territory, and the difficulty of getting them together even to discuss their own problems, the task of organization is a hard one.

While several farmer organizations of national scope already exist, they really include only a very small percentage of all farmers. While these bodies are helpful, they can never be really effective without a large and loyal membership.

As former Secretary Jardine once said: "Big business is efficient because it is organized. It knows the best methods of production and what the market demands, both quantity and quality. Organization will bring to agriculture the same benefits that it has brought to business."

WHEN BATHS WERE FEW

If certain dates we have run across lately are authentic, the joke about the Saturday night bath is not so old as we had imagined. It is recorded that the first bath-tub put in commission in the United States was christened on Christmas day, 1842.

Looking up the day of the week in a perpetual calandar, we find that this was Sunday, but it is possible that the first bath was really taken on Christmas eve, thus establishing the Saturday night tradition.

Upon its introduction the bath-tub was looked upon with much suspicion, as it is by small boys until this day. In Boston an ordinance was passed prohibiting baths except upon the advice of a physician. About 1844 the Philadelphia city council came within two votes of passing an ordinance prohibiting baths altogether between November 1 and March 15.

Bath-tubs were heavily taxed in those days, even as the modern automobile. Shortly after they were introduced into Virginia a state tax of $36 was imposed on each tub installed.

Still, Americans of those times were more given to bathing than the old Russians. We have read somewhere that Peter the Great bathed only once a year. But there were extenuating circumstances. Russia is a very cold country.

OUR CITIZENS ABROAD

State Department records show that more than four hundred thousand citizens of the United States now have residence in foreign countries, more than half of whom reside in Canada.

Among European countries, France has the most American citizens, about 24,000, while Portugal has the next largest number. The urge to get back to nature probably accounts for the 114 Americans now living in the Society Islands of the South Pacific. Naturally enough, Cuba and Mexico have attracted the greatest number of those who have removed to Latin-America.

While this large number of Americans now live in other countries, many of them are not American-born, but are naturalized citizens who have returned to their native lands.

And some of the native Americans who now prefer residence abroad do not do so entirely from choice, but because if they had not made a get-away they might now be in American prisons.

HENPECKED HUSBANDS

Henpecked husbands were applauded by Dr. C. W. Kimmins, a British educational leader, in an address before a woman's luncheon club in New York recently. His tribute must have been most gratifying to both the wives and husbands concerned. He said:

"The henpecked husband is the most delightful and childish persons in the world. Some hen-pecked husbands are not really hen-pecked; they are hen-protected."

Another encouraging statement he made in this connection was that "hen-pecked husbands live longer than those who are not hen-pecked."

We must agree that though they may not actually live longer, it no doubt seems longer.

We read that a certain radio crooner has a mellow voice. In our ignorance of the artistic we had always considered it rotten.

After selling a customer a hunting rifle and watching him load it, a sporting goods clerk in Newark was then held up and robbed of $75 by the customer.

IT COSTS LESS TO KEEP THEM WELL

when your home is heated with Natural Gas

Women used to dread rainy days! When the weather kept the children indoors they were bound to become restless, playing about the house first in warm rooms then in cold. It was too much to expect of a busy mother to keep up a furnace-fire that gave whole-house warmth. But that was before Controlled Gas heating was available.

Today there is no excuse for part of the house being cold and part of it warm. Today there is no need either for bothersome fire-tending. Controlled Heat by Natural Gas is a truly carefree system of househeating that assures even "Comfort Zone" warmth in every room, regardless of the weather. Clean, quick-acting heat flows from Natural Gas heating equipment at a finger's touch on an electric button, key or automatic thermostat.

Once Controlled Heat was labelled with a high-cost price tag. Only the wealthy could afford it. Today, the low cost of Natural Gas heating equipment makes Controlled Heat available to thousands who have always wanted it but thought they could not afford it. Investigate this modern Natural Gas heating equipment at your local dealer's store or at the P. G. and E. Do it today—right now.

CONTROLLED HEAT

With gas fuel you can have maximum heat instantly available and keep it regulated to any temperature desired. Controlled heat from gas heating equipment is possible by merely turning a valve or handle, by pressing a button to get high, low or medium heat, or by setting an electric thermostat to automatically maintain any desired temperature.

Patrol, Safety Group In Headlight Campaign

Both the California Committee on Public Safety and the California Highway Patrol are making a determined effort this month to eliminate the gasoline headlight evil as a means of reducing driving hazards that are intensified with the arrival of winter driving conditions.

Educational activities by the committee are in progress at the same time as the annual campaign of the Highway Patrol against glaring and illegal headlights. Consequently, the motorist will be wise to check on the condition of his lights, says a statement by the California State Automobile Association, pointing out that officers of the Patrol will give citations for operating in violation of the law.

While announced as a November effort, the campaign will be continued indefinitely until the evil has been abated, according to Chief E. Raymand Cato of the Highway Patrol.

The campaign is being directed against glaring headlights, "one-eyed" cars, automobiles operating without tail lights, with dirty and cracked lenses, and other infractions of provisions of the California Vehicle Act.

Some suggestions whereby motorists may determine whether their headlights comply with the law are given as follows:

Turn the lights on at a level point in the road, walk from 100 to 150 feet and inspect them. You should be able to tell whether they are glaring.

Walk back a short distance from the rear of the car and see if the tail light is lighted or if it is giving sufficient light to be visible 500 feet. The lenses may be dirty or covered with dust.

Examine the lenses and reflectors. They may be tranished or dirty.

Don't think that because the lights are poor they are not glaring. Glaring lights frequently mean poor illumination because the rays are scattered and the bulbs are tipped too high.

Red Cross Annual Roll Call To be Held Nov. 11 to 24

The Red Cross annual roll call, or membership campaign, will be held November 11-24.

During the year, 2,276 American Red Cross chapters have participated in unemployment relief, aiding 454,000 families at an estimated Red Cross expenditure of $2,215,000. The Red Cross needs your membership. Join, November 11-24.

Red Cross chapters and the national organization working jointly during the past year, handled the cases of more than 400,000 ex-service men and their families. Your membership will help carry on this welfare work.

Red Cross flour milled from government wheat has been distributed to 3,387,156 families throughout the United States up to August 13 this year. Enroll in the Red Cross, November 11-24.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK?

By Edson R. Waite, Shawnee, Okla.

There are many puzzled, tired brains and much talk among our country's leaders, all trying to solve the problems of the times. We hope they may get somewhere some day, for millions of people are waiting for more action and less talk.

The gloomy philosophers of a past generation, having achieved something like classic rank in the respect that well read people have been supposed to know something about them, go in and out of fashion as do other semi-permanent schools of thought. At present they seem to be out of fashion, but it seems that a modern school of gloomy philosophy may be established in their stead. Now they seem to be more interested in the narrower matters of politics and economics.

Good advertising commands attention and helps to sell that which is advertised.

The application of unpractical theories in the present economy wave may do more harm than good.

A city should make street crossings safe for pedestrians as well as for motorists.

Ability plus tact, plus cleverness, plus honesty, make success, and that is what we are all striving for.

Some men think they know it all, but do they?

Business men must think in the days of today and tomorrow—not in the days of yesterday.

Experience teaches a lot of people things they should know.

Most business concerns advertise in the newspapers because they believe in the merchandise they have for sale and want others to do the same.

WOMEN RULE FACTORIES

Women forced sink manufacturers to increase the height of their products so that back strain would be eliminated from kitchen work. Packaged foods line the pantry shelves of the woman whose mother insisted on cooking everything she placed on her dining room table. She demands new beauty in all her furniture and home decorations.

Even the household washer has come in for special attention from womankind, according to the American washing machine manufacturers' association. "Today is is transformed, because women want it to harmonize with all other features of home improvement," it says. "Today's models are finished to harmonize with practically any color scheme."

This change has come in response to wemen's demands, just as other changes have come in this year's washers. The result is that when a woman is seen hanging out clothes, it's no sign she's a washerwoman. Many housewives are undertaking tasks they formerly gave to others. The change has been hastened by the ease with which it has become possible to perform once difficult operations.

The old hours of drudgery and back-breaking labor have been taken out of wash-day. The houswife mindful of her appearance begins her Monday work as willingly as she faces any other day in the week.

The Everlasting Whisper

At last Brodie returned and stood looking from Gloria to Gratton.

"One of you knows," he said shortly. "Which one?"

"I swear to God—" began Gratton.

"Shut up! Then it's you?" The little, shiny blue eyes, never so coldly evil, drew her own frightened eyes, fascinated and held them. "You know."

"I don't know! All I know—"

"Don't lie to me! It'll do you no good." He lifted a hand and held it over her, the enormous fingers apart and rigid. "I'll make you tell!"

"Listen to me," she managed to cry out. "I don't know, I tell you. But I know where it might be. In a place you would never think of looking. I'll tell you—if you will keep your hands off me! I'll make a bargain with you. I'll show you the place; if there's gold there, I don't care what happens to it—if you'll only agree to let me alone—to let me go—"

Brodie laughed at her. But Benny cried out:

"Of course we'll let you go! What do you suppose we want of you? Once we get our hands on it she can go, Brodie. Tell her so, you big—"

"Sure," said Brodie, with a wide grin. "It ain't women we're after this trick: It's something better."

"I—I am not sure what you'll find," whispered Gloria. "I only know that—Oh, dear God, I hope you find all the gold in the world!"

Hastily she ran by Brodie toward the dark end of the cave. Then she stopped and tried to think; how many paces had King said? She came back to the fire; thirty, thirty-five? She began counting as she walked while they watched her wondering and following slowly after her. She found several boulders in her path; but she had not gone far enough. She kept on; thirty, thirty-two, thirty-three—She could hardly see about her. She stumbled against a rock in her way.

"Try here," she said. Already Brodie and Steve Jarrold were at her side. "This rock. See if it will move—"

They thrust her roughly aside. Brodie set down his rifle, laid his big hands on the boulder, and as if it had weighed only ten pounds, tossed it out of the way. He knelt, feeling along the ground. A sudden shout burst from him:

"Down here! There's a big hole; there's a dark cave underneath. That's where it is?"

They brought fagots; at the edge of the hole they hastily built another fire. They crowded round, peering down. Brodie set his legs over the opening, called to the Italian to grab his rifle and keep an eye on Gloria and Gratton, and went down. The others crowded about the hole, waiting impatiently for him to go through, and then began piling down after him. Gloria could see their figures dimly. She heard them calling back and forth excitedly. Suddenly they were silent. Then there were swift mutterings. And then a great, triumphant, many-voiced shout. In Gus Ingle's treasure cache they had at last come to Gus Ingle's treasure. And, among other things, to the skeleton of Gus Ingle himself, sprawling here for sixty years in the dark over a great heap of gold.

CHAPTER XII

Swen Brodie, whose will had at all times directed, was now absolute dictator. Big and brutal and fearless, drunken with gold, he loomed above his companions, driving them, commanding them, swearing violently that they would do what he told them to do or he'd dash their brains out.

"We're going down to the lower cave," said Brodie. "Everything we can pry loose is going down with us. We'll pitch the loose chunks of gold over the cliff and we'll stow 'em away somewhere else—where King, if things break some way we don't look for, won't find 'em! What's more, we move our camp from down the canyon to the cave below. Steve Jarrold, you and Tony are elected to that job, and you'd better get a move on. Bring up what grub's left, and the blankets and stuff. The rest of us will start in firing gold overboard and putting it somewhere more safe—all that's loose. Now move! Come ahead, you other fellows. You, too, Gratton; we ain't forgot you. You can help. And so can you," whirling on Gloria. "Woman or no woman, you got hands and feet!"

Night, pitch-black, had come when they had done. Gloria, scarcely able to stand from exhaustion, her body bruised, her hands and arms wounded from many a jagged rock as she had gone back and forth carrying heavy loads, went with the others into the lowest cave in which already the gold had been stowed away. She sank down wearily; she closed her eyes rather than watch the men about their fire, eating noisily, drinking noisily from their bottles which Steve and Tony had brought from their other camp. Trying to remain unnoticed in the shadows was Gratton. Brodie caught up a big piece of dried beef and gnawed at it like a dog.

"It's been a day's work, at that," he said with a full mouth. "But we ain't done. I noticed how no man has said a word about how we split what we found."

"There's five of us," said Benny quickly. "We split it five ways, even, like pardners."

Brodie turned on him slowly, still rending at his meat, still clutching his rifle and holding it so that no man might forget that he held it.

"Think so, Benny?" he said ponderously. "Being as I've worked on this lay a long time, since I let you others in on it, since I led you to it—think that's the fair way to split it? Now suppose you listen to me. You boys ain't mentioned a split because it was none of your say and you knew it. Say, in round numbers—but there's ten times that—that there's a million dollars tucked away here. I get just half that; that leaves half a million, don't it? That's five hundred thousand to split between four of you; that's over a hundred thousand for every man jack of you. And that's what I call a fair split."

They growled in their throats at that, but no man took it upon himself to speak out definitely though they glanced sidewise among themselves. Benny, who always had a thought of his own, said quietly:

"What are you doin' about Gratton? He'll claim his share, won't he? And, if you say him no, he'll shoot his face off, won't he?"

"No," said Brodie heavily. "Gratton won't talk. Gratton stole grub. When grub-stealing was the same as slitting a man's throat. He's done, that's what he is!" With a swift gesture his gun was at his shoulder.

A strangling cry broke from Gratton's agonized soul. A hand, wildly outthrown, caught at Gloria's sleeve.

"You, there," called Brodie, "stand aside. Unless you're wanting yours, too!"

Gratton was pressing tight to Gloria, seeking futilely to get behind her. He began to articulate—to beg—to promise—

Brodie fired. A great reverberating roar filled the cavern. Gloria, her brain gone suddenly numb, felt the grip on her arm tighten convulsively. Then it relaxed—slowly. Gratton was sinking—

Gloria put her hands over her eyes and screamed. Again and again her scream broke from her. She tried to draw back, to run. But all her strength was gone. She crumpled and settled down almost as Gratton had done, and so close to him that she brushed him with her knee. She felt the body twitch. She leaped to her feet and ran blindly, screaming. She struck against the rock wall and sank down again.

The wonder was that she did not swoon outright. As it was, her soul seemed to float dizzily out of her body and through an utter dark. She thought that she was dying. As though across a vast distance she heard voices.

"Well?" It was the man who had done the shooting, his voice truculent. "Anybody got anything to say? Say it quick, if you have."

There was a silence. Then a shuffling of feet. Then an answering voice, thin and querulous. It was Benny.

"He had it coming," he said eagerly. "Any judge would say so. Stole every bit of grub when stealing grub is the same as cutting a man's throat, just like you said, Brodie. He had it coming. You done right."

"You, Jarrold," demanded Brodie. "Got anything to say?"

"No. Benny's right. He had it coming. D—n fool."

"And you, Brail? And you, Tony? Got anything to say? Talk lively!"

Brail and Tony, like the others before them, were quick to excuse Brodie's act. They spoke briefly and relapsed into silence. Then, beginning far away and coming closer with the speed of an onrushing hurricane, Gloria heard heavy feet crunching in the dirt and gravel. A hard hand gripped her shoulder, jerking her to her feet.

"You, friend," said Brodie. "What have you got to say about it?"

"Don't forget who she is," another voice was saying. Steve Jarrold's. "Remember what I told you. We got to think this out. She came along with King."

Brodie turned away from her. His mood was not so soon for a woman.

"See she keeps her mouth shut," he said threateningly. "If she ain't got sense enough for that she ain't got sense enough to go on living. Don't let her go. That's all I got to say about her right now."

She made an uncertain step toward the mouth of the cave. One clear thought and only one formed in her mind. As she had never longed for anything in her life, she yearned for Mark King.

"Mark!" she screamed, "Mark King! Save me."

Jarrold clapped a big dirty hand over her mouth. She grew silent, cowering. She heard a sound of something dragging and could not hide her fascinated eyes. Thus she watched as Brodie gripped the slack of Gratton's coat shoulders and shoved the body out into the snow. She even marked how the living man spat after the dead.

"Go to the coyotes," he muttered. "They're your kind."

Gloria knew that if she took a step Jarrold would clutch her again. So she stood very still. Brodie came back and threw some wood on the fire and squatted down over the provisions, seeming to be taking stock of them. He brooded over the fire, giving no sign of noticing her.

"Let me go," she said to Jarrold. "I am sick. I'd die here. Please let me go."

Jarrold shifted and looked to his companions. Benny shook his head.

"There ain't no hurry," he stated judicially.

"Where is King?" asked Brodie.

"I don't know," she answered, speaking with difficulty. "I . . . Oh, for God's sake, let me go. I won't say anything about what I saw; I promise. If you will only let me go."

"They promise easy and break promises easier," said Jarrold.

Benny came up and touched Brodie on the shoulder. The squatting man started and scowled. Benny stooped and whispered. Brodie got up heavily and together the two withdrew, going further back in the cave. They talked but Gloria could not catch the words.

Soon they gave over their whispering and came back to the fire, where Brail and the Italian looked up at them sharply. Here was another guarded conference among the four.

Brodie made a last remark and laughed; the others laughed after him, and the four looked toward Jarrold and Gloria. Gloria was quick to see that Brodie had set his rifle away somewhere against the rock wall in the shadows. Only Brail still clung to his gun; if he should set it aside—if there should come a moment when she could slip to the cave's mouth—in the outside dark, despite the deep snow, she would at least have a chance to escape from them.

"It's time we had a little talk," said Brodie out of a short silence. "Without anybody's skirt listening in. Leave her back there, further from the front door, Jarrold. Where she can't get an earful, and where she can't make a getaway; you come on over here a minute."

Gloria made no resistance but sank down limply where Jarrold left her and watched him as he slouched over to the fire. A few times she heard them laugh; she could distinguish Brodie's throaty, bull tone and Benny's nervous cackle. Brail and the Italian said little; they were men to follow where other men led.

"Come here," commanded Brodie.

She started. He was calling to her! She got up and moved forward slowly. It was obey or be dragged to him.

"Gratton's, then King's, then Gratton's again?" Brodie chuckled. "I don't care whose before Gratton's the first time; but whose after Gratton's the last time, that's it! Who are you for, Bright-Eyes? Me or Steve?"

"No!" she cried, her hands at her breast. "No! I am not like that! I was not Gratton's; I am . . . I am Mark King's wife!"

"So?" admitted Brodie good-humoredly. "Well, that cuts no ice; it's open and shut you'd gone back to Gratton. Now, come over here. Closer. Come over here and give us a kiss." He jerked from his pocket a dull lump, one of the smaller, richer nuggets. "I'm no pincher; come across and I'll give you a whole handful of gold!" His tone was playful.

But Jarrold cut in less playfully:

"Leave her alone, Brodie," he advised. "She don't cotton to you, and, what's more, whose gold is it, anyhow? We ain't divided yet. And she . . . Well, if she belongs to anybody, she's mine!"

"So?" Brodie's monosyllable was expressionless. "Well, I was asking her. And she ain't answered yet."

Fast as the girl's heart beat, her thoughts sought to fly faster. These men were brutes; here she began, and, alas, here she ended. She had never known what brute meant; she had called Mark King that! And now, if only Mark King could hear her call, could come to her. . . . But that was less thought than prayer. In a moment she would feel upon her either the hands of Brodie or the hands of Jarrold. There was but one thing left to do, but one part to play— Oh, G—d, if she could play the part! She struggled mightily for a calm utterance. And in the end she said in a tone which she managed to make full of challenge:

"Which of you is the better man?"

They stared at her, all of them puzzled by her change of attitude as by her words. Then Brodie, with a noisy explosion of laughter, smote his thigh.

"The better man!" he shouted. "Hear her, Steve, old horse? The better man!" He lunged to his feet. "I'll go you, Steve. The lady's right; she goes to the man who's man enough to get her. That's big Swen Brodie, the best man in these mountains! I'll go you for her, Steve. By G—d, she's worth it, too."

But Steve Jarrold sat where he was, glaring.

"She's sly," he grunted, cursing before and after. "Can't you see what she's up to? She wants us to fight one another; she'd be glad if we both killed one another. You don't understand women, Brodie; they're sly, like cats."

Brodie extended his great hands, the fingers crooked, curving slowly inward, like steel hooks.

"I can eat you alive, and you know it, Steve," he mocked. "What's more, she knows it! That's what she wants; she's picked me, Steve! That's just her way of letting you down easy; she don't aim to hurt your feelings. Will you come on and take a fall for her? Or is the lady mine? What's the word; speak up, man!"

Magnificent Rio

A Street Vendor of Rio.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

RIO DE JANEIRO, which recently has been disturbed by political strife involving several Brazilian states, basks on the golden sands almost astride the Tropic of Capricorn.

To enter this great world port you walk down the gangplank and straight out into a formal garden with a big bronze fountain. This leads off into a Fifth-avenuelike boulevard, which in turn flows into a wide, world-famous beach drive, past embassies, clubs, and palms and geometric gardens. Dingy docks, pawn shops, pool halls, quick-and-dirty cafes, cheap rooming houses, runners, dirt, smells—all the trash and claptrap of many other water fronts are missing here.

Out in the bay, the startling profiles of singular peaks rise in their bulk like elephants sitting in grotesque pose. They include the much-photographed Sugar Loaf, and the oddly-shaped Corcovado, or Hunchback.

Rising fully 1,200 feet and almost straight out of the sea, Sugar Loaf is easily Rio's outstanding landmark. Incoming air pilots, if half lost in fog or rain, hail its familiar outlines with grunts of relief. In a queer aerial trolley—a dizzy trip which is a supreme triumph for the nervous—you can reach its top in two laps. The first stage carries you to the top of Urca; there, if still conscious, you ride on up to the crest of Sugar Loaf for a balloonlike view of the bay and city.

Look at this spectacular city from Sugar Loaf, Hunchback, or any high angle, and you see how smoothly in mass, form, and color it harmonizes with the shape and shades of its terrestrial environment.

You observe that it is cohesive, one work of art; yet it is not a solid city, with a checkerboard pattern of blocks and squares squeezed into rigid "city limits," like Leipzig or Indianapolis.

Something easy, loose, and fluent in its multicolored distribution makes you feel that Rio is simply flowing down the mountains about it in graceful architectural streams, then coming to rest in quiet valleys and on sandy beaches.

Seen From the Air.

Fly over it and its marvels only multiply; it has so many parts, sections, and suburbs; and in its pattern, from the sky, it looks like a great paint-spotted easel of blue water, yellow sand, green trees, red roofs, pink and blue walls. Think of all these colored parts turning round and round, like the odd-formed bits of colored glass in an old-fashined kaleidoscope. Then you can imagine exactly how Rio looks from an airplane that banks and turns, a mile above it, on a bright, clear day.

Back to earth, on the famous Avenida Rio Branco, the Unter den Linden or Fifth avenue of Rio de Janeiro, you meet the city at its best; also, familiar big-town sights, sounds, and smells make you feel normal here and much at home.

New York papers, any popular North American magazine, chewing gum from Chicago, your own favorite brand of safety razor, cigarettes, fountain pen, writing or talking machine, sport roadster, ice-box, or outboard motorboat—all are here, with all their familiar show-window placards that greet you on Main street anywhere from Syracuse to Seattle. Likewise, radio sets, crooning to crowds the latest Broadway "hits"; displays of North American cameras; enlarged snaps of local bathing beauties having Brazilian "it"; groups of soccer players; the dark horse that paid 20 to 1 at last Sunday's races and his popular jockey, pictured peeping through a big horseshoe of flowers.

And Rio, window-shopping here, looks in on Paris perfumes, soaps, chapeaux, gowns and lingerie; German etchings, water colors, oils, and shelves of drugs and surgical instruments and hardware; English rackets, balls, cricket sets, saddles, socks, hats, and pipes; and, most significant of all, the steady march of Brazil's own manufacturing, revealed in huge stocks of textiles, leather, shirts, clothing, dishes, dry-goods, toys, shoes, and packaged food—all "made in Brazil!"

This wide, resplendent avenue, one and an eighth miles long, lined with beautiful trees, and piercing the city from the Beira Mar to the piers, was boldly opened only two decades ago in the ambitious plan for a better city. To cut it through, nearly 600 buildings were razed.

One of its startling aspects is its sidewalk, made up of small stones of different colors, laid in zigzags, in waves, and in other dizzy patterns.

Interesting Street Crowds.

But it is the people who interest you most, especially the crowds who promenade late in the afternoon. Coffee shops, cafes and tea rooms line the Avenida Rio Branco, many with wide colored awnings that reach out over the pavement. Flocks of tables are set out here in the open air, so that patrons may sip drinks, smoke, and watch the well-dressed, handsome women who stroll by to be admired. This is a custom of the country. It is perfectly correct to cast admiring glances, and the women do not resent it. In fact they expect it. And, on fine evenings, the passing show is not unlike a parade of mannequins displaying the latest styles in feminine garb at a New York fashion show.

Although prohibition is unknown in Brazil, very few seem to dally much with the cup that cheers. Cosmopolitan seaport though it is, Rio is a most orderly and abstemious place. But it drinks coffee to excess.

What we call lunch is breakfast in Rio. After this meal the brokers, bankers, merchants and clerks all flock to their favorite resort to drink coffee. Late in the afternoon they all go again, and perhaps at various other times during the day they drop in for the tiny cup, if they happen to be near a cafe.

Coffee is taken very strong and sweet, as in the Near East. In the cheaper cafes an automatic bowl of granulated sugar is on each table. By means of a trigger, it shoots a man's allowance into his cup at one dash. Often you see men try it first toward the floor, to see if it is working!

By his dress alone you can seldom tell an upper-class Brazilian from a well-groomed European. You seldom see a man without a vest, even on hot days. Derby hats and canes are everywhere; some men carry fans; and bootblacks and barbers could almost claim an "essential occupation" to avoid the draft in wartime!

Here, along the Rio Branco, is the voice of the city. Around these sidewalk cafes you hear town talk, which may be in any one of three or four languages. It is a gossips' free-for-all. And here conversation is an art—as much enjoyed as music. All the lounging coffee drinkers and the groups standing about wave their hands and wobble their heads in Latin-American emphasis, each anxious to make himself heard. Passing by, you hear scraps of talk on every theme, from the coffee crop and the Sao Paulo snake farm to the identity of the pretty girl who just went by in a roadster.

United States Visitors Welcome.

Nowhere, from the Rio Grande to Cape Horn, is the visitor from the United States more welcome than in Rio. Whether he comes as tourist, salesman, scientist, diplomat, artist, student, teacher, resident engineer, merchant, or delegate to an international highway conference, he soon senses that Brazilians hold our country in high esteem.

Between the two capitals, Rio and Washington, friendly diplomatic intercourse has been unbroken for a hundred years. When we entered the World war, President Braz of Brazil said in his message to congress: "With our elder brother, the United States, at war, it is impossible for Brazil to remain neutral."

Rio—rich, leisurely, and at ease—is not "Americanized" in dress, manners, or in methods. Probably she never will be, for here a new race is in the making—a racial amalgamation new to the world possessing unique social, industrial, and cultural possibilities.

But Rio is tolerant and wise. From us, as from Europe, she takes what she can use, whether it is ideas or goods. This is fair play among nations. Brazil buys about one-fourth of all her imports from us, and we buy perhaps 45 per cent of all she exports. If she feels that her young men can learn more about engineering, agriculture, or dentistry in the United States than in Europe, she sends them here to school. If she thinks North American capital and managerial talent can improve her public utilities, she invites their aid; and, co-operating vigorously, she sets her public health officials to work side by side with American "Rockefeller doctors" in yellow fever control.

A Certain Match

By QUEENA POLLACK

SHIRLEY VAN DORN shifted gears, and settled back in her driver's seat to survey the surrounding country with zest.

"Don't take it too fast, dear," advised Aunt Victoria, who had been her guardian since her own mother had died ten years before.

"But I can't crawl," protested Shirley.

"You'll be tired by the time we reach Gardner's, dear, and week-end parties usually have strenuous athletic programs," began Aunt Victoria.

"Do you suppose I shall like anyone there?" interrupted Shirley. "If tiresome Tom Manley attaches himself to me, I warn you, Auntie, I'll fly home."

"You know," Victoria Brownslee started, ingratiatingly, "Mrs. Gardner whispered at dinner the other night that she expected Ted Farson, the shipbuilder's son, if he returned in time. You've never met him, Shirley, and you know he's quite the catch of the season."

Helplessly, Shirley laughed. Wasn't it bad enough to have to listen to dull conversation of the usual sort, she thought, without having to be bored by another youth returned from Europe and his tourist impressions?

"Dear, I'm thirsty," put in Aunt Victoria, "can't we stop at the next spring?"

"Yes, of course, and let's trust that it will cool my indignation about hasty and plotted marriages," Shirley answered firmly.

Shirley drew up by the side of the road and told her aunt to wait in the car while she brought a cooling drink to her. Crossing a road in the spring, she narrowly escaped being run down by a dusty blue car that flew with powerful speed from out a side road.

A mild looking youth in drab hiking costume pulled Shirley to the other side of the road, and encircled her shoulder with a stalwart arm to steady her.

"Oh, thank you," Shirley said dutifully. "You know, America might have lost one of her rashest daughters if you hadn't jerked me aside in time."

"And one of her prettiest, too, I venture," the youth added, with a wide winning smile.

"Tosh," replied Shirley in her contemptuous manner for flattery. "But I started across this road to get my aunt a drink. Now I see no cups."

"If I may oblige you," said her companion, proffering a cup from a camping outfit. "I'll risk crossing the road this time for your aunt."

"No," she countered hastily, noting the disapproval on her relative's face at this prolonged conversation.

She bent over to fill the cup with glistening cool water, and thought her rudeness to the man who had saved her life was unworthy of her real feelings.

"Here," he said, masterfully. "Let me at least fill the cup for you, Miss. . . ."

"My name is Shirley Summer. And yours?" she said evading the question.

"Timothy Torrence," he replied, suppressing a smile. She did not know whether he was smiling over her name or his own.

"Well, good-by and thank you for my life, which I do not value very much these days," she said, attempting to disarm further talk.

"Good-by," he said equally unperturbed, "I hope to have the good fortune to rescue you some other time."

Shirley ran back to the car without a backward glance. Strangely, her aunt was smiling, and not at all impatient. As she jumped into the driver's seat, she thought guiltily that she might offer to drive her rescuer as far along the main road as she was to travel.

Her aunt voiced the same thought, which surprised Shirley. When she called the invitation, he accepted with alacrity.

"This is my aunt, Mrs. Brownslee, and this is Mr. Timothy Torrence," introduced Shirley. "Climb in and keep each other company. I'm driving as fast as I can to the Gardner estate at Langhorn road. If you want to stop before then please signal me."

Once again she shifted gears, but this time sat forward in her driver's seat, tense. Faster and faster, she found herself flying toward Langhorn road. She could not hear conversation in the rear of the car, but did hear low laughter. What a sudden and strange camaraderie for staid Aunt Victoria! As there was no call for her to stop, Shirley thought her passenger was going past Gardner's. She stopped the car, almost wilted with the rush.

"We're late already, Shirley," said Aunt Victoria as she emerged from the car on the Torrence boy's arm. "Perhaps it will save embarrassment later if I introduce you to Ted Farson right here. Shirley Van Dorn is her right name."

Bewildered, Shirley stared from one to another, and then surveyed their smiles with one of her own.

"Oh, I recognized her," countered the smiling, brown-eyed traveler of intelligence. And once again, a stalwart arm encircled her shoulder and she knew she would be saved from the danger of misalliance.

Snake-Eating Hogs

Hogs frequently kill and eat snakes, even rattlesnakes, and snake-infested regions are often cleared of the pests by introducing hogs.

TIRED MEN AND WOMEN

Are we on the verge of becoming a race of prematurely tired men and women? Educators and authorities in physical training, physicians and scientists who have been studying the effects of stressful modern life on the individual believe this situation constitutes an important national and world problem.

They say that the average individual, unable to adapt himself to the rapid changes and heavy pressure of the machine age, is slowly but surely deteriorating. Overwork, worry, lack of proper rest and recreation, excesses and unsound living habits all lead to a condition of chornic fatigue which threatens health and well being. The medical profession has determned that prolonged fatigue develops a chronic fatigue poisoning, the result of an accumulation of waste products in the body, which the system cannot throw off unaided. It manifests itself in an inability of the affected indvidual to secure physical relaxation or mental repose.

Overwork, faulty respiration or any condition which interferes with the carrying of oxygen to the bodily tissues, underfeeding, improper feeding, indigestion and lack of assimilation are among the important causes ascribed as responsible for fatigue poisoning. The use of stimulants, acting as a whip to the tired body and stimulating it to further fatigue excesses, if not actually causing further functional dsorders, has also been described as aggravating factors by eminent physicians.

Those best acquainted with the problem agree that the average individual can accomplish a great deal by simpler living, and the inclusion of forms of relaxation suitable to his or her abilities.

FARMERS AND MACHINES

By many the plight of agriculture, as well as that of other basic industries, is blamed on the introduction of machinery which has displaced manual labor. At the present moment is seems that this indictment of the machine age is well founded.

But—without the aid of modern machinery it is pertinent to inquire what would be the condition of civilization today. One recent student of economics points out that if we were forced to return to the old hand methods of production, it would be impossible to have the standard of iiving, either rural or urban, which exists at present.

Before the age of machines daily living was in a very primitive state. Obtaining of food, clothing and shelter was about all anyone could hope for. There were little opportunities for recreation, amusement or culture for the great mass of the people. There were no motion pictures, no automobiles, no radio, no electric conveniences, and no leisure.

Farmers of fifty years ago enjoyed none of the comforts and conveniences which the machine age has made possible for them. The back-breaking toil which farmers of a past age experienced is unknown today. No longer do they cut wheat with a cradle, or thresh it with a flail. They have been emancipated from most of the drudgery of former times.

So, in spite of the complaints which we hear on every hand, it must be admitted that the farmer of the present is much better off than his father or grandfather ever was. Machines have been a blessing to the farmer, in spite of the temporary over-production of crops which they have made possible in recent years.

WOMEN AND FOOTBALL

It looks as though male cohorts who have been struggling to maintain their illusion of sex superiority would have to throw in the sponge and take the long count. It was bad enough to have voting booths, barber shops, offices and smoking rooms invaded by the conquering feminine horde. But, now comes the devastating news that women threaten to outpoint men in football conversation too, from no less an authority than Christy Walsh, head of the all-American Radio Football Show, who probably knows more famous coaches and football experts than any man in gridiron circles.

"Women have superior aptitude for football strategy," says Walsh, who travels 30,000 miles in football season to get the viewpoint of the fan in the bleachers. "When they make the football boners that are the basis of so many jokes, it is usually to flatter the ego of some male escort.

"Women who go to football games without mere males give me the best questions," continues this authority who interviews such great football generals as "Pop" Warner, Stanford strategist; A. A. Stagg, Chicago's patriarch; "Gloomy Gil" Dobie, Cornell leader, and Major Frank Cavanaugh, Fordham, every Friday night over the air for the All-American Football Show. "Mrs. Knute Rockne was one of the great football strategists of all time and so was Mrs. Walter Camp before her," continues this expert, exploding this latest refuge of male superiority.

A Southern legislator wants a course in sexology included in the public school curriculum. Probably for unsophisticated kids below the third grade.

Anyway, prohibition has stamped out the inellegant phrase "rot-gut whiskey." Because there is no other kind any more.

Investigations of campaign expenses this year will probably be devoted chiefly to finding out why the boys didn't come across.

JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS

An unusual figure passed away recently on his plantation near Yazoo City, Mississippi, after several years of retirement. It was John Sharp Williams, who voluntarily quit the United States Senate in disgust in 1923, after nearly thirty years of serving in Congress, saying: "I'd rather be a hound dog and bay at the moon from my Mississippi plantation than remain in the United States Senate."

John Sharp Williams was an ardent supporter of Woodrow Wilson's plan for American entry into the League of Nations, and the defeat of the plan was largely responsible for his leaving public life.

Senator Williams was a brilliant orator, whose stinging sarcasm caused many a political opponent to wince. His feud with Senator Vardaman of his own state is memorable, and he aided greatly in Vardaman's defeat by Pat Harrison in 1918.

It is said that after he retired from public life, Senator Williams was offered $30,000 a year for a weekly article on any subject he might choose, but that he declined, saying: "I wouldn't be tied down to do anything once a week for anybody, or for $30,000."

He was 78 years old at the time of his death.

A GRIM RECORD

Death came peacefully in sleep some time ago to William C. Patterson, "the world's oldest hangman and first electrocutioner," at his home in Hornell, N. Y., at the age of 84.

Mr. Patterson was hangman at Auburn prison, New York, for years before the electric chair was substituted for the rope, and during his time as executioner had put 54 convicted criminals to death.

These included Kemmler, the wife slayer, the first man to meet death in the electric chair; Mary Farmer, first woman to be so executed; Leon Czologosz, assassin of President McKinley, and many others whose crimes attracted world-wide attention.

Shortly before his death, when asked whether he believed he had ever executed an innocent person, Mr. Patterson said: "It is a good rule of life to mind your own business. I was not employed at Auburn as a judge."

His was a grim record, but he seems to have taken his job philosophically, and from the ripe age he attained it appears that if he was ever haunted by memories of his victims his days were not materially shortened thereby.

FEEDING PREJUDICES

Most of us who consider ourselves broadminded are anything but that. Otherwise, how can we account for the fact that we are seldom interested in reading the "other side" of any question.

We read almost exclusively such books, periodicals and newspapers as we know in advance will generally coincide with our own views. Few Republicans subscribe for a red-hot Democratic paper, or vice versa. People take church papers only of their own denomination. Capitalists take few labor papers, and laboring men would hardly look at one which reflects the capitalistic viewpoint.

In other words, we all have more or less confirmed opinions on nearly every important subject and do not admit that there may be some virtue in the contentions of those who take an opposite view.

As a recent writer said, "The only facts we can tolerate are those we already know." We read, not to really learn something new, but for the purpose of confirming ourselves in our present beliefs and prejudices.

THE CONQUEROR

About 900 years ago, in 1027 (some say 1028), there was born in France an illegitimate child who was destined to play an important part in the world's history.

He was the son of Robert, duke of Normandy, and Herleva Fulbert, daughter of a tanner of Falaise. He is known in history as William the Conqueror, and was the leader of that epochal struggle known as the Norman Conquest, which made him master of England.

Claiming succession to the English throne by virtue of a former compact with Harold, earl of Wessex, William invaded England when Harold himself accepted the English crown. At the famed battle of Hastings, October 14, 1066, William was victorious through a brilliant stratagem and Harold was killed. Within five years William had conquered all England, and although numerous insurrections against his authority afterward occurred, he maintained his mastery with a firm hand as William I.

Both before and after the conquest of England, William had to fight many battles to hold his original territory in Normandy, being pitted at times against his own son, Robert. In 1087, while at war with the French, he invaded the district of Vexen and burned the town of Mantes. His horse, plunging into the burning cinders, inflicted wounds from which William the Conqueror died on September 9, 1087.

William was stern and self-reliant, and unscrupulous, but less cruel than many other warriors of his time, although he did wreak terrible vengeance upon a French district whose inhabitants had taunted him with his illegitimate birth. His nine hundredth anniversary was celebrated with elaborate ceremonies, both in England and in parts of France.

TRAP SHOOTING AT SEA

Officials of steamship companies catering to tourist travel continually tax their ingenuity to provide entertainment for their passengers on long voyages. Concerts, dancing, theatricals, deck golf, and many other amusements have long been commonplace on shipboard.

A recent innovation which has become one of the popular sports of passengers enjoying vacation cruises to Central and South America on a certain line is trap shooting. Double-barrel shotguns, clay pigeons and traps have been added to the equipment of the larger vessels, and with apparatus rigged up on deck at the ship's stern, the passengers may bang away at the clay pigeons as they whirl over the water. Women voyagers are quite as enthusiastic over the sport as the men, and turn in some excellent scores, it is said.

Cruises to Latin-America have attracted many vacationists this season, and arrangements for these voyages have been facilitated for inland people by making it possible for them to buy round trip tickets from railroad agents in their own home towns.

Some wag has suggested that Christopher Columbus originated the slogan "See America First." However that may be, an increasing number of Amercans appear to be adopting the idea.

A British educator suggests a course in laughter in the schools. In our school days excellent results were gotten with no more elaborate equipment than a bent pin.

The executive board of the Well Baby Clinic met at the home of Mrs. Mazie Boyle, president, for lunch and a business meeting. Among those present were Mrs. L. Landini, Mrs. Eva Page, Mrs. Maynard Chesney, Mrs. E. Lohr, Dr. H. Henderson, Mrs. M. Woodside and Mrs. Urton. At the close of the business meeting the board voted to give a donation to the Red Cross. The San Mateo city chapter of the Red Cross has paid for the services of the baby specialist for three years, and hundreds of babies in this district have been benefited by this service.

A Ford coupe owned and driven by Mrs. Margaret J. Pettigrew, of 47 Hillcrest Drive, which had been parked, ran down Los Olivos avenue about 4 o'clock last Saturday afternoon and struck the rear of an Essex, owned by Frank Newman, of Los Banos avenue. Mrs. Pettigrew had parked her car at Los Olivos and Mission streets, and left her nephew in the car, while she was shopping. The car ran driverless down Los Olivos avenue to Los Banos, striking the Essex sedan, which was parked in front of the Newman home. Both cars were badly damaged, but the child came out of the fray without a scratch.

CHURCHES OBSERVE RED CROSS SUNDAY

Churches of many denominations will observe Red Cross Sunday on November 13, calling attention to the need for support in the annual Roll Call for memberships opening Armistice Day and continuing until Thanksgiving.

Members of the clergy will graphically present the stirring story of the Red Cross which ministers unto every race, color and creed in times of distress, emulating the example of the Good Samaritan.

VOLUME 5 FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1932 NUMBER 16

Published in the interests of the People of Daly City and vicinity by H. H. Smith and Employees.

Would Please Her

"What would your mother say, little boy, if she could hear you swear like that?" demanded the passerby, virtuously.

"She'd be tickled to death if she could hear it," answered the youngster.

"Why?" asked the lady, shocked.

"Why," exclaimed the boy, "because she is stone deaf."

ABERDEEN and American Block—the Coal that satisfies.

Debtor: "Here's $2 on account."

Debtor (with bill for $50): On account?"

Debtor: "Sure! On account of not having the rest of the money."

Own Your Home

"The man who assists his fellow-townsman to own his own home is a public benefactor."

Every time a renter becomes a home-owner the entire community is benefited.

Nearly everyone must borrow to build, and money loaned for home building, right here, where the loan can be selected and looked after, is an excellent investment.

"What's the matter with that Scotch student?"

He's just got a shine and then remembered that he had on his roommate's shoes."

Little Boy: "When I eat an apple, the worms have to look out for themselves."
